Anastasiia Carisio

I am a PhD candidate at the program of Theoretical and Applied Linguistics at Complutense University of Madrid, Spain. My area of research is Cognitive Linguistics, cultural linguistics and ethnolinguistics.

My thesis is entitled "Lexical-conceptual analysis in the combined framework of Cognitive Linguistics and Theory of the Linguistic Image of the World". I did my temporal stay at University of Verona, where I gave an international seminar entitled Cognitive definition as an analytic tool for cultural linguistics.

In 2020, my article "The Linguistic Image of the World and Image Schemas: an attempt at their delimitation and comparison" was accepted for "The Complutense Journal of English Studies". In addition, I have been accepted to lecture on Cultural Linguistics in the framework of the Ethnolinguistic School of Lublinfor the third Cultural Linguistics International Conference in Budapest.

At the moment, I am working together as co-authors with my supervisor, Prof. Enrique Bernárdez, on a book entitled "Curso de Lingüística Cultural" (Course in Cultural Linguistics).

Since 5 years ago I live in Madrid teaching Russian as a foreign language at the Pushkin Institute of Madrid.